

10/9/76

Dear Harold,

I've really been busy lately - I got a promotion and my new job requires me to work overtime every few days. I'm now doing proofreading. I was dying of boredom doing indexing, so I asked my supervisor if there was any chance of getting a job that would let me use my brain a little more. My timing was great because one of the lawyers had just asked her to find someone to start proofreading the brief as it was being written. I'm also working on a background information booklet which will be given to all the lawyers & engineers as they arrive to work on the case. It's alot more interesting than what I was doing, but not something I'd like to do indefinitely. Corporate law is definitely not for me.

I'm also spending alot of time after work & on weekends working at Carter/Mondale headquarters. I'm doing advance work & helping with press relations. Having a fantastic time & getting some good experience.

Monday nights I have a class called "Election '76". I'm not taking it for credit or anything, I just missed school.

Best,
Karen
